Cotton Price Is 'Up To Farmers'

If the farmers produce as much cotton this year as they did last year they may expect a price of about 8 1/2 cents a pound. This is the expert opinion of 21 leaders of the cotton trade, according to F. W. Gist, State and Federal statistician. These estimates, however, Mr. Gist explains, are much more optimistic than the judgment of the Federal Farm Board and the economist of the United States Department of Agriculture.

The following figures represent the average judgment of the 21 leaders in the cotton trade as to the price which will prevail if the crop is of the size indicated—

Bales—	Cents
10 millions	16.50
11 millions	15.50
12 millions	14.50
13 millions	13.50
14 millions	12.50
15 millions	11.50

The United States Department of Agriculture expected a gradual price two cents a pound lower if the varied sized crops materialize, Mr. Gist said.

"Of course," he said, "much depends on the turn which general business and industrial activity takes in the meantime."

According to the two opinions if a crop of ten million bales is grown this year the aggregate value would be $225,000,000 and $225,000,000, respectively. The crop of 1930, 14,200,000 bales, was worth $674,000,000. In other words, by growing a crop of 10,000,000 bales less a probable gain will accrue of $50,000,000. A reduction of the crop to that figure by cutting the average 30 per cent would save $16 per acre, or $205,000,000, in the cost of production, assuming that the yield per acre is not lowered by leaving off fertilizers and good culture.
